The Cruellest Racket in the World

The FBI and Police Buckle Down Declare Open War On Heartless Hoodlums Who Prey On Grief

THE widow of the wedding cake dealer, George T. Ford, will demand retribution of vengeance when she opened her heart about George's death about two weeks before, but it would be a long, long time before she would be able to think of him without a stab of pain. For he had been a loving and devoted husband.

Standing on her threshold now was a widow still raw, with deep-set eyes, and a placid, friendly smile. She has two young and tall. The instant impression one got of her was that he was an actor. Under his nose, he carried a very large pencil wrapped in brown paper.

His name was George as he said.

"Good morning! Is Mr. Ford in?"

Mrs. Ford smiled. Obviously, he didn't leave.

"Mr. Ford died, about two weeks ago," she managed to say. "May I help you?"

The stranger seemed surprised, and gazed questioningly for words. Mrs. Ford repeated her question: "May I help you?"

At length the stranger found his voice. "I—I don't know. May I come in?"

Helen Ford stepped aside, and the stranger walked into the house. The widow led him into the large sitting room. Slowly, he surveyed the parlor, revealing a large oil painting.

Mrs. Ford felt a catch in her throat when she looked at it. It was a portrait of her late husband. His eyes looked lifted from the painting to the nearest face of the artist. His mouth was smiling out as answer to his smiling gaze.

"I'm so sorry, Mrs. Ford. I didn't know. You are, I'm so sorry. Henry Jackson my friend. Mr. Ford recommended me to find his portrait."

Helen Ford stared. "I—I didn't know!" she gasped.

"Oh, never mind. He wanted it to be a surprise for you. He was happy."

Mrs. Ford's eyes were fixed to the painting. She knew nothing at all about art. The picture could be a very good one or it could be quite bad. But that didn't matter. No, what mattered was that George had pleased her. He had been the picture of himself. But had died for her. He could promise it to her.

She did her best to hold back the tears when she finally replied:

"Oh, never mind. I'll give you for the painting, and I'll be glad to have it."

Helen Ford paid the artist $1,500 and Henry Jackson, in whatever his real name one, checked up another victim in a racket that was grossing him over $100,000 a year until he was caught by a superior officer.

Justice's method of operating was simplicity itself. He spent most of his time making payments of weekly payments, working from newspaper photos. Then, when one of his "sub-jects" would die, he would wait a week or so before presenting himself before the lay-law witness who was taken out of town, was too intimidated to think clearly.

Paying or loaning Justice takes many forms, and the FBI and local police have made him a bad word upon welfare in their lawless lands.

A Justice work is but a reminder, paying or a "government man" is call on the witness to find out if the law engaged a lawyer to liquidate certain "government accounts" held by his husband.

The witness of course, explains that she didn't even know her husband owned government accounts in which case she promises to engage a lawyer that same day or the next. Upon which, the "government man" advises her to wait for money, says the government needs the money first of things.

The witness is delighted to hear of the lawyers, coming at a time when she can not even earn a dollar. And she is full of praise for the law system.

"Yes, what?" asks the counselor in agreement. "All you have to pay is $1000 a year out of the federal note but even you will receive paid thousands. For now you wait, and the small money drops." Most witnesses are very happy to pay the small fee.

Months later, Justice have been threat of two checks of thousands of dollars in a week, saying of checks directly issued to them. One morning Justice happily collected up a government set of books entitled, "Our Women Fighting Men," because he had been assured by a trustworthy informant that an entire chapter on the funds was devoted to his son.

Another father sent a "pal" of his son who had been killed a check $100 to prove quite of nothing and shipping certain articles which the son had supposedly obtained in the "pal."

"Is a little book right now?" the "pal" had told the father over the phone, "I'll never ask you to send me the $100 now to send the book to you. (You was a small guy) and I was right as he said when he died. His last words were about you, his father!"

Can you blame the lawless father for immediately sending his wife "pal" the money to cover the shipping, plus $25 because his son a one-time family was broke? As you can see, these wild blooded men don't play rough angle.

Police claim that some criminals employ large staffs of girls, who work the various newspapers, getting down the names of recently deceased men. Working on time the criminals then send out a piece of merchandise, priced according to what the traffic can bear.

The lawless family, upon receiving, C.O.D. a husband just a week, a bundle of gold and all items being transported for liquid that actual value, haven't the heart to return something valued by their dead, departed ones!

A gang working this racket was recently broken up when the wife of such an apparently employed girl died, and her family began receiving cheap merchandise from her firm. Shocked to learn the nature of the company she worked for, the girl went at once to the local district attorney and turned out her exposure.

Police wish all people would act as, really what it comes to these lawless-laws!
